

ELLE FASHION

April 20, 2009

Devon Jarvis

JEWELRY NEWS: DARCY MIRO

The sculptor-come-jeweler works with recycled, earth-friendly material

Sculptor Darcy Miro has brought her interest in nature's seemingly random repetition to her own jewelry line. Not only does the New York designer (who has a shop in the West Village) work with recycled gold and other metals, she reuses every scrap found in her studio and crafts on a table made from a tree that fell in a Staten Island park. "The earth is very important to me," Miro explains—to say the least.

